

Address Comes Unexpectedly at Meeting of Southern Women Writers, but Was Not Concluded.
Many Prominent Writers Attend.

Urged to Co-Operate.—Mrs. Rutledge Smith, of Tennessee, then presided over the meeting and in a very gracious speech extended her welcome to all present at the Richmond and to the Woman's Club, for their courtesy. She paid tribute to the history of the State and begged that the women of Virginia co-operate with the men in the fight against the enemy—illiteracy—for which education and enlightenment must be the watchword. A land that has given so many statesmen and makers of history to the world, she said, must have sons and daughters in whose veins the strain of genius still exists, only
